Description of teaching subject

The "Theories of urban planning" courses are intended for students in the first year of the bachelor's degree in urban planning.

They are drawn up by myself in accordance with the teaching content set out in the LMD brochure for the town planning specialism.

The aim of the course, which lasts 2 hours per week, is to introduce students to urban planning and the concepts behind it.

With no previous knowledge of the world of urban planning, they will become familiar with the concepts, theories, doctrines and objectives of this discipline.

With the exception of the last course, which was spread over 3 or even 4 sessions, the first courses were each spread over two sessions.

I would like to draw your attention to the fact that the lessons I give are based on certain criteria and objectives. They are designed according to the level of the students and the documentation, which is enriched over the years and even days. I also make myself accessible to the students by using the blackboard rather than the overhead projector, whose effectiveness has been recognised.

Tutorial sessions are scheduled in parallel with the lectures. The content of the tutorial sessions is related to the subject: town planning and, of course, the courses.

A number of works on the theme are produced by the learners. These are basically individual research projects. In parallel with the research work, lectures are given. TDs introduce students to university research.
